delivery rule in many cases in which the plaintiff has not suffered discernible damage at delivery. Code section 2-725(2) emphasizes this possibility by providing that the action accrues "when the breach occurs, regardless of the aggrieved party's knowledge of the breach." Nonetheless, this language does not require that an action for breach of a repair promise accrue at delivery. Because the seller has no repair obligation at delivery, no breach of the repair promise, known or unknown to the buyer, can occur at delivery. Thus, the action should not be held to accrue at delivery.

Replace with:

delivery, in the case of repair warranties, "it is the refusal to remedy within a reasonable time, or a lack of success in the attempts to remedy which would constitute a breach of warranty." Thus, the action could accrue only after the seller failed to repair. Although the court quoted (in a footnote) section 2-725(2) in full, it avoided any mention of the future performance exception. Perhaps because it realized that repair provisions do not promise performance of the goods as required by Code language, the court cited non-section 2-725 precedent as authority for giving the repair provision prospective treatment.
