DEDICATION

It is my solemn honor to dedicate Volume 33 of the Michigan Journal of International Law to Professor Eric Stein. Professor Stein was a formidable fixture in the fields of international and European law. He has been a guiding presence, supporter, and advisor for this Journal since its inception. But more than that, he was a remarkable teacher, mentor, and friend to generations of students and academics. As will be illuminated in the tributes and reflections that follow, he never allowed prestige or pretense to isolate him from the community of knowledge that he loved so much, and as a consequence he lastingly affected the lives of so many in ways both large and small.

I, too, count myself among those fortunate to have worked with Professor Stein. As the newly minted Editor in Chief, I found myself in the privileged position of working on what would become Professor Stein's final published work—his first-hand reflections of living and serving in Italy during and after World War II. Although I was understandably intimidated by both his greatness and my own newness in office, I was immediately set at ease by Professor Stein and his gracious wife, Virginia, at our first meeting. Here was a man in his late nineties who obviously still possessed a keen intellectual vigor, and though weakened by illness, took time to ask about my background and studies before beginning work on the piece. It was this concern for others that characterized Professor Stein's life, and is a true measure of his greatness.

With the passing of Professor Stein, the academy has lost a scholar, the Law School has lost a family member, and the world has lost a teacher. But the legacy of Professor Stein will live on, forever, in the countless lives he touched.

Editor in Chief
