2015

How the ALI's Restatement Third of Property is Influencing the Law of Trusts and Estates

Lawrence W. Waggoner
University of Michigan Law School, waggoner@umich.edu
Available at: https://repository.law.umich.edu/articles/1677

Follow this and additional works at: https://repository.law.umich.edu/articles

Part of the Estates and Trusts Commons, Legislation Commons, and the State and Local Government Law Commons

Recommended Citation

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Faculty Scholarship at University of Michigan Law School Scholarship Repository. It has been accepted for inclusion in Articles by an authorized administrator of University of Michigan Law School Scholarship Repository. For more information, please contact mlaw.repository@umich.edu.
How the ALI's Restatement Third of Property is Influencing the Law of Trusts and Estates

Lawrence W. Waggoner†

Restatements, once limited to restating existing law, are now substantially devoted to law reform. The ALI's website states its law-reform policy thus: "The American Law Institute is the leading independent organization in the United States producing scholarly work to clarify, modernize, and otherwise improve the law."¹

In 2014, the Brooklyn Law Review published a symposium issue on Restatements of the Law.² A paper in that symposium argued against the ALI's law-reform policy.³ The † Lewis M. Simes Professor Emeritus of Law, University of Michigan; Reporter, Restatement (Third) of Property: Wills and Other Donative Transfers. I thank John Langbein for commenting on an earlier draft.

---

The Merrill-Smith complaints come from the perspective of property-law teachers and some of them have nothing to do with the Donative-Transfers project. But some of their complaints do relate to the Donative-Transfers project, and, as the Reporter for that project, I wish to respond to their claim that that project has lost influence in the development of the law. I would add that the Landlord-and-Tenant, Mortgages, and Servitudes projects cover real-estate topics, are properly located under the Restatement of Property umbrella, and are within the expertise of property-law teachers. The ALI has in fact recently announced that it will begin work in 2015 on a Restatement (Fourth) of Property, but that project will be limited to real-estate topics. See Press Release, American Law Institute, The American Law Institute Announces Four New Projects, available at http://www.ali.org/email/pr-14-11-17.html.

Donative Transfers is a trusts-and-estates topic and is within the expertise of trusts-and-estates scholars. Donative Transfers could therefore logically be a separate Restatement and be titled the Restatement of Wills and Other Donative authors specifically speculated that the reformist rather than restatist character of the recently completed Restatement (Third) of Property: Wills and Other Donative Transfers (Property Restatement) has “very likely” caused that Restatement to lose influence—be ignored—in the development of the law.5

Before expressing such a harsh judgment,6 one would expect the authors to have examined the statutory and case law, as well as the trusts-and-estates scholarly literature, to see if there is any evidence that supports their case. They did not. Instead, they based their claim of irrelevancy on the ALI’s royalties from Westlaw downloads as compared to royalties from the Restatements of Torts and Contracts.7 Although the authors cite no comparisons based on dollars and cents, the fact is that royalties for downloads is a superficial measure of the impact of a Restatement. More important is what the downloaders do with the downloads.

The law of trusts-and-estates has long been in need of substantial reform. This short essay serves as an interim report on how the Property Restatement is contributing to that effort8 and, in the process, refutes the claim that the 5 Merrill & Smith, supra note 3, at 682. (“Perhaps most critically, the Second and Third Restatements of Property have been given over to campaigns for legal reform, often entailing the repudiation of earlier volumes of the Restatement, which has very likely undermined the utility and the credibility of the ALI’s effort.”). For a similar point of view regarding Restatements in general, and § 39 of the Restatement (Third) of Restitution and Unjust Enrichment (2011) in particular, see the opinion of Justice Scalia, in Kansas v. Nebraska, 135 S. Ct. 1042, 1064 (2015) (Scalia, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part) (“Over time, the Restatements' authors have abandoned the mission of describing the law, and have chosen instead to set forth their aspirations for what the law ought to be ... Restatement sections such as [§ 39] should be given no weight whatever as to the current state of the law, and no more weight regarding what the law ought to be than the recommendations of any respected lawyer or scholar.”). Justice Scalia's statement about the weight to be given to a Restatement section ignores the deliberative processes of the ALI that every Restatement section goes through before it becomes final. See Overview: How ALI Works, ALI, http://www.ali.org/index.cfm?fuseaction=about.instituteworks (last visited Feb. 25, 2015).

---

6 Not to be overlooked is the willfully hostile subtitle the authors chose for their article: “The Disintegration of the Restatement of Property.” Merrill & Smith, supra note 3, at 681 (emphasis added).

7 See generally John H. Langbein, Major Reforms of the Property Restatement and the Uniform Probate Code: Reformation, Harmless Error, and Nonprobate Transfers, 38 ACTEC L.J. 1 (2012); Lawrence W. Waggoner, What's in the Restatement's reformist character has undermined its importance. The Property Restatement's influence extends to all three pillars of law reform: uniform laws, decisional law, and legal scholarship.

I. INFLUENCING UNIFORM LAWS

There has been significant cross-fertilization between the Property Restatement and uniform laws dealing with trusts-and-estates.9

Unifying the Law of Probate and Nonprobate Transfers. Although probate and nonprobate transfers occur at death and thus are functionally equivalent, the law has historically applied different rules to these categories. One of the broad themes of reforming the law of trusts-and-estates is to unify the law of probate and nonprobate transfers, so that the same rules apply to both.10 The Property Restatement and the Uniform Probate Code (UPC) embrace that theme in various manifestations. For example, the law has historically held that divorce presumptively revokes provisions in a will in favor of the former spouse but has not applied the same divorce-revocation rule to nonprobate transfers such as revocable trusts or life insurance. In an important reformist move, the Property Restatement and the UPC extend the divorce-revocation rule to nonprobate transfers.11

Class Gifts. Division V of the Property Restatement, consisting of four chapters and 19 sections, contains a comprehensive treatment of class gifts, especially addressing the newly emerged question of the rights of children of assisted reproduction to participate as class members. Class gifts are widely used in estate planning documents. The Uniform Law Commission (ULC) codified Division V in the Uniform Probate Code.\textsuperscript{12}

---

\textbf{Powers of Appointment.} Division VI of the Property Restatement, consisting of seven chapters and 42 sections, contains a comprehensive treatment of powers of appointment. Powers of appointment are central to estate planning practice. The ULC codified Division VI in the Uniform Powers of Appointment Act.\textsuperscript{13}

\textbf{Reformation to Correct Mistakes.} The law historically has authorized courts to reform \textit{inter vivos} donative documents, but not wills, to correct mistaken terms.\textsuperscript{14} Section 12.1 of the Property Restatement adopts a reformation doctrine for wills as well as for other donative transfers. The ULC codified that Restatement provision in the UPC and the Uniform Trust Code (UTC).\textsuperscript{15} In North Dakota, a state that has enacted the UTC reformation provision, the state supreme court in \textit{In re Matthew Larson Trust Agreement},\textsuperscript{16} noted that the Comment to the UTC reformation provision states that the provision was copied from the Property Restatement’s reformation provision. The court then proceeded to quote extensively and with

\begin{footnotesize}
\begin{enumerate}

In \textit{Astrue v. Capato}, 132 S. Ct. 2021 (2012), the Supreme Court upheld the Social Security Administration’s interpretation of § 416 of the Social Security Act as requiring that state intestacy laws, despite being nonuniform, control the right of posthumously conceived children of assisted reproduction (ART children) to Social Security survivor benefits. See Waggoner, supra note 11, at 1658-62. In \textit{Mattison v. Soc. Sec. Comm’r}, 825 N.W.2d 566 (Mich. 2012), the Michigan Supreme Court held that ART children born to the decedent’s widow are not entitled to take by intestacy under Michigan law (and hence not entitled to Social Security survivor benefits). \textit{Id.} at 570. The \textit{Mattison} decision prompted the Council of the Probate and Estate Planning Section of the State Bar of Michigan to appoint a committee to study enactment of the UPC provisions dealing with ART children. Full disclosure: I am a member of that committee.

\item 831 N.W.2d 388, 394 (N.D. 2013).
\end{enumerate}
\end{footnotesize}
approval from the Property Restatement’s Comments and Illustrations.\textsuperscript{17} In 2014, the Internal Revenue Service issued private letter rulings accepting the validity for tax purposes of UTC mistake-correcting reformations.\textsuperscript{18}

Modification to Achieve the Donor’s Tax Objectives. Section 12.2 of the Property Restatement adopts a tax-motivated modification doctrine for wills as well as for other donative documents. The ULC codified that Restatement provision in the UPC and the UTC.\textsuperscript{19} In 2014, the Internal Revenue Service issued private letter rulings accepting the validity for tax purposes of UTC tax-motivated modifications.\textsuperscript{20}

Premarital and Marital Agreements. Section 9.4 of the Property Restatement on premarital and marital agreements regarding the surviving spouse’s elective-share and other rights provides—for the first time to my knowledge—that financial disclosure is not sufficient for the agreement to be enforceable. Informed consent also requires disclosure of the legal rights that the spouse or spouse-to-be is forgoing by signing the agreement. The ULC adopted that position in the Uniform Premarital and Marital Agreements Act.\textsuperscript{21}

II. INFLUENCING DECISIONAL LAW

The Property Restatement has also had considerable influence with litigants seeking to change existing law or make new law and ultimately with the courts in embracing the Restatement’s proposals.\textsuperscript{22} It is important to point out that the

\begin{footnotesize}
\begin{enumerate}
\item Id. at 394-95, 397, 399 (quoting and applying PROPERTY RESTATEMENT, supra note 4, § 12.1).
\item See UNIF. PROBATE CODE § 2-806 (2014); UNIF. TRUST CODE § 416 (amended 2010).
\item See UNIF. PREMARITAL & MARITAL AGREEMENTS ACT § 9 (2012).
\item Only two cases, to my knowledge, have rejected a Property Restatement’s reformist initiative: one a four-two decision on the reformation of wills, \textit{Flannery v. McNamara}, 738 N.E.2d 739, 745 (Mass. 2000), and the other on the inclusion of property subject to a general power of appointment for purposes of the elective share of the surviving spouse, \textit{Bongaards v. Millen}, 793 N.E.2d 335, 347 (Mass. 2003). For criticism of Flannery, see Martin L. Fried, \textit{The Disappointed Heir: Going Beyond the Probate Process to Remedy Wrongdoing or Rectify Mistake}, 39 REAL PROP. PRAC. & TR. J. 357, 400 (2004). Dissenting in Bongaards, Chief Justice Marshall said: “I dissent from so much of the court’s opinion as indulges in the criticism of, or forecloses in any respect our subsequent consideration of, the recently approved § 9.1(c) of the Restatement (Third) [of Property: Wills and Other Donative Transfers].” \textit{Bongaards}, 793 N.E.2d at 354 (Marshall, C.J., concurring in part and dissenting in part). Also, in \textit{In re Estate of Phillips}, No. 01-0879, 2002 WL 1447482, at *1-
\end{enumerate}
\end{footnotesize}
following list does not include case law with routine citations to the Restatement in support of existing law. Here, then, is a list of decisions, compiled in alphabetical order by jurisdiction, in which the court changed existing law or made new law on the basis of the Property Restatement:

Ruotolo v. Tietjen. The court adopted the Property Restatement's position that mere survival language does not trump an antilapse statute, saying: "In sum, we agree with [the Property Restatement]."

Carlson v. Sweeney, Dabagia, Donoghue, Thorne, Janes & Pagos. The court, in a tax reformation case, adopted the Property Restatement's position that a mistake of law, as well as of fact, can be the basis for reforming a provision in a testamentary trust, saying: "We adopt the [Property] Restatement['s] view on this subject."

University of Southern Indiana Foundation v. Baker. The court abandoned the distinction between types of ambiguity in construing instruments, saying: "We agree with [the Property Restatement] and [other] authorities that the latent/patent distinction ... no longer serves any useful purpose."

Sieh v. Sieh. The court adopted the Property Restatement's position that the value of property owned or owned in substance by the decedent is subject to the forced share of the surviving spouse, even when the forced-share

---

2 (Iowa Ct. App. July 3, 2002), an unpublished opinion, the court declined to adopt the harmless-error rule of PROPERTY RESTATMENT § 3.3 on the ground that adopting such a view was a matter for the legislature.

Two additional decisions cite and adopt PROPERTY RESTATMENT § 12.1 on reformation on the ground of mistake: Estate of Irvine v. Ooas, 309 P.3d 986, 990 (Mont. 2013), and In re Irrevocable Trust Agreement of 1979, 331 P.3d 881, 888 (Nev. 2014). Although these are cases of first impression in their jurisdictions, the donative documents in question were inter vivos, not wills, so I have not listed these cases in Part II as adopting the Property Restatement's reformation doctrine for wills.

24 890 A.2d 166 (Conn. App. Ct. 2006), aff'd per curiam, 916 A.2d 1 (Conn. 2007).
25 890 A.2d at 177 (quoting and applying PROPERTY RESTATMENT, supra note 4, § 5.5).
26 895 N.E.2d 1191 (Ind. 2008).
27 Id. at 1200 (quoting and applying PROPERTY RESTATMENT, supra note 4, § 12.1).
28 843 N.E.2d 528 (Ind. 2006).
29 Id. at 535 (quoting and applying PROPERTY RESTATMENT, supra note 4, §§ 10.2, 11.1).
30 713 N.W.2d 194 (Iowa 2006).
statute refers only to the probate estate, saying: "We adopt the view of the American Law Institute on this issue."\textsuperscript{31}

\textit{In re Estate of Beauregard.}\textsuperscript{32} The court adopted the Property Restatement’s position that preponderance of the evidence, not clear and convincing evidence, is the proper standard of proof for rebutting the presumption that a lost will that is traced to the testator’s possession was revoked by act, saying: “We follow the [Property] Restatement... on this point, for the reasons [there] explained.”\textsuperscript{33}

\textit{In re Griffin Revocable Grantor Trust.}\textsuperscript{34} The court, on “the basis of [the Property Restatement and other] authorities,” concluded that “while [the Michigan statute on no-contest clauses] does not apply to trusts, it reflects this state’s public policy that no-contest clauses in trust agreements are unenforceable if there is probable cause for challenging the trust.”\textsuperscript{35} Later in the opinion, the court adopted the Property Restatement’s definition of probable cause.\textsuperscript{36}

\textit{Magnuson v. Diekmann.}\textsuperscript{37} The court said: “Because Minnesota caselaw on reformation pertains to contractual rather than donative instruments, we turn to [the Property Restatement for guidance].”\textsuperscript{38} The court then quoted and applied several provisions of that Restatement dealing with reforming a donative document to effect the donor’s intention.\textsuperscript{39}

\textit{In re Martin B.}\textsuperscript{40} The court, in a case of first impression, held that the terms “issue” and “descendants” in trusts include children conceived posthumously by means of assisted reproduction, saying: “The rationale of the [Property] Restatement... should be applied here.”\textsuperscript{41}

\textsuperscript{31} \textit{Id.} at 197-98 (quoting and applying \textit{PROPERTY RESTATEMENT, supra note 4, § 9.1(c) & cmt. j}). The Iowa legislature subsequently rendered the forced share ineffective by expressly limiting the nonprobate transfers subject to the spouse’s share to one type—revocable \textit{inter vivos} trusts. See \textit{IOWA CODE} § 633.238 (2009); \textit{In re Estate of Myers}, 825 N.W.2d 1 (Iowa 2012).

\textsuperscript{32} 921 N.E.2d 954 (Mass. 2010).

\textsuperscript{33} \textit{Id.} at 958 n.5 (quoting and applying \textit{PROPERTY RESTATEMENT, supra note 4, § 4.1}); see also \textit{Id.} at 957 n.4.

\textsuperscript{34} 760 N.W.2d 318 (Mich. Ct. App. 2008).

\textsuperscript{35} \textit{Id.} at 322 (quoting and applying \textit{PROPERTY RESTATEMENT, supra note 4, § 8.5 cmt. i}).

\textsuperscript{36} \textit{Id.} at 323.

\textsuperscript{37} 689 N.W.2d 272 (Minn. Ct. App. 2004).

\textsuperscript{38} \textit{Id.} at 274.

\textsuperscript{39} \textit{Id.} at 275 (quoting and applying \textit{PROPERTY RESTATEMENT, supra note 4, §§ 10.1, 10.2, and 12.1}).

\textsuperscript{40} 841 N.Y.S.2d 207 (Surr. Ct. 2007).

\textsuperscript{41} \textit{Id.} at 211 (quoting and applying \textit{PROPERTY RESTATEMENT, supra note 4, § 14.8}).
In re Estate of Herceg. The court adopted the Property Restatement's position that a will can be reformed on the ground of mistake, saying: "[I]t seems logical to this court to choose the path... recommended by the [Property] Restatement ..."

See also In re Matthew Larson Trust Agreement, supra.

III. INFLUENCING LEGAL SCHOLARSHIP

The Property Restatement is also influencing the third pillar of law reform—legal scholarship. Just about every trusts-and-estates law review article published lately cites the Restatement for one or more propositions. The trusts-and-estates casebooks are replete with full-section extracts from, and other references to, the Restatement. A statutory supplement that is widely adopted for classroom use reproduces provisions of the Restatement alongside provisions of the UPC and, where relevant, other uniform laws dealing with trusts and estates.

beneficiary of a trust. The new legislation will also necessitate significant attorney involvement in order for such a child to benefit. The statute’s stringent requirements relate to high-formality documentary evidence of the deceased genetic parent's consent to allow posthumous conception, post-death recordation of the decedent's written consent, and post-death delivery by the prospective birth mother of written notice of possible use of the decedent's genetic material for conception. The statute also imposes constrictive time limits for post-death conception or birth. Finally, for wills or trusts that became effective before September 1, 2014, as well as for decedents who died intestate before that date, the statute only allows a child to take from the deceased genetic parent, not from an ancestor or any other relative of the deceased genetic parent. See N.Y. Est. Powers & Trusts Law § 4-1.3 (McKinney 2014). In a report issued after the bill passed the Assembly, the Association of the Bar of the City of New York urged the governor to sign it into law. The City Bar's report praised the bill's effect of "limiting" the number of posthumously conceived children who will qualify as trust beneficiaries. See New York City Bar, Report on Legislation by the Trusts, Estates and Surrogate’s Courts Committee 1, 5 (July 2014), http://www2.nycbar.org/pdf/report/uploads/20072610-PosthumouslyConceivedChildren.pdf.

43 Id. at 905 (quoting and applying PROPERTY RESTATMENT, supra note 4, § 12.1).
44 See supra notes 16-17 and accompanying text.
46 See, e.g., JESSE DUKEMINIER & ROBERT H. SITKOFF, WILLS, TRUSTS AND ESTATES (9th ed. 2013); THOMAS P. GALLANIS, FAMILY PROPERTY LAW: CASES AND MATERIALS ON WILLS, TRUSTS AND FUTURE INTERESTS (5th ed. 2011).
CONCLUSION

The Property Restatement has influenced and is influencing the law of trusts and estates. Its influence extends to all three pillars of law reform: uniform laws, decisional law, and legal scholarship. Any claim to the contrary is demonstrably false.