New Juvenile Discovery Rules: Mandatory, Comprehensive, and Streamlined.

Joshua B. Kay
University of Michigan Law School, jbkay@umich.edu

Available at: https://repository.law.umich.edu/articles/2066

Follow this and additional works at: https://repository.law.umich.edu/articles

Part of the Evidence Commons, Juvenile Law Commons, and the State and Local Government Law Commons

Recommended Citation

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Faculty Scholarship at University of Michigan Law School Scholarship Repository. It has been accepted for inclusion in Articles by an authorized administrator of University of Michigan Law School Scholarship Repository. For more information, please contact mlaw.repository@umich.edu.
New Juvenile Discovery Rules

Mandatory, Comprehensive, and Streamlined

By Joshua B. Kay

The recently promulgated amendments and additions to the civil discovery rules include several changes affecting child protection and juvenile delinquency proceedings.1 The updates should make discovery in juvenile court matters more efficient by clarifying what is discoverable and requiring more timely exchange of information.

Automatic discovery and timelines for all juvenile matters

Perhaps most important, the new rules do away with the requirement that parties file discovery demands. As of January 1, 2020, discovery will be automatic in juvenile cases: “The following materials are discoverable as of right in all proceedings and shall be produced no less than 21 days before trial, even without a discovery request.”2 (Emphasis added.)

The old rule required that discovery demands be filed no later than 21 days before trial, and there was no provision indicating when discovery had to be produced, leaving practitioners to set arbitrary deadlines. These deadlines for production could be unreasonable or leave too little time to prepare for trial. Under the new rule, as noted above, discoverable materials must be produced at least 21 days before trial, putting all parties on notice and giving everyone involved more time to incorporate discovered materials into their trial preparation.

What is discoverable in all matters?

The new rule also describes what materials are discoverable, managing to both broaden and make more specific the kinds of information that must be produced. Once the rule becomes effective, “all written or recorded statements made by any person with knowledge of the events in possession or control of petitioner or a law enforcement agency” are discoverable, rather than just “nonconfidential” statements, as the old rule states.3 The new rule notes that discoverable materials are not limited to those enumerated, and the list now includes allegations of maltreatment included in a Child Protective Services (CPS) complaint as well as CPS investigation reports, as long as the identity of the person who reported the case to CPS is protected.4

Also specified as discoverable are the results of psychiatric and psychological evaluations, which are frequently court-ordered in child protection proceedings and sometimes become the subject of discovery disputes.5 Taken together, the new rule’s automatic discovery requirement, deadline for production, and range of discoverable materials should help streamline court proceedings and level the playing field in child protection and juvenile delinquency cases, which inherently involve differences in investigative and negotiating power between the state Department of Health and Human Services and the other parties.

Specific requirements for delinquency matters

Another major change is the addition of new discovery and disclosure requirements particular to delinquency matters. Previously, there were no requirements specific to delinquency cases.6 The new rule incorporates the discovery requirements in MCR 3.922(A) and adds several provisions.7 For example, parties must disclose known criminal convictions of any witnesses they may call at trial.8 The prosecuting attorney must produce any known exculpatory information or evidence.9 Parties must also produce any written or recorded statements of a defendant, co-defendant, or accomplice pertaining to the case even if that person is not a prospective witness at trial” as well as “any plea agreement, grant of immunity, or other agreement for testimony in connection with the case.”10

That said, there is no automatic right to discovery of “information or evidence that is protected by constitution, statute, or privilege, including information or evidence protected by a respondent’s right against self-incrimination” in delinquency cases.11 However, if a juvenile makes a showing that there is a “reasonable probability” that privileged records “are likely to contain material information necessary to the defense, the court shall conduct an in camera inspection of the records.”12 The rule goes on to...
Collectively, the new juvenile discovery rules are designed to reduce guesswork and discovery disputes and ensure a more even playing field for the parties.

describe subsequent procedures depending on what the court finds and whether the privilege holder waives the privilege. In any case, the court must preserve the records in question for possible appellate review. Furthermore, the rule provides that counsel must maintain custody of privileged records, and the records may be used only for the purpose approved by the court. Finally, if some portions of material are discoverable and others are not, the non-discoverable portions may be excised, provided that the disclosing party informs the other party that non-discoverable information has been excised and withheld. The other party may demand “a hearing in camera to determine whether the reasons for excision are justifiable.”

Discovery for disposition and review hearings

The new rules do not only address discovery before trial. In delinquency matters, several types of material must be provided to the respondent, respondent’s counsel, and the prosecuting attorney at least seven days before “dispositions, reviews, designation hearings, hearings on alleged violation days before “dispositions, reviews, designation hearings, hearings on alleged violation days before dispositions, review hearings, and permanency planning hearings. Historically, timely exchange of these materials has not been consistent, a problem the new rules should remedy.

Discovery for termination of parental rights hearings

Finally, the old child protection rules regarding termination of parental rights hearings were silent about discovery. Yet termination of parental rights hearings are generally quite similar to trials, and there may be considerable additional documentation that accrued since the case began but was not revealed to or shared by the parties. The new rules apply the discovery requirements contained in MCR 3.922(A) to termination proceedings. It is worth noting that termination of parental rights at initial disposition was already covered by MCR 3.922(A), because the evidence for termination is generally taken at the same time as the evidence for adjudication in these cases. The new rules apply to cases in which termination is generally quite similar to trials, and there may be considerable additional documentation that accrued since the case began but was not revealed to or shared by the parties. The new rules apply to cases in which termination is based on different circumstances than adjudication or a failure to rectify the conditions that led to adjudication.

Conclusion

Collectively, the new juvenile discovery rules are designed to reduce guesswork and discovery disputes and ensure a more even playing field for the parties. Most importantly, counsel and clients will have more complete information and more time to review materials, which should improve counsel’s ability to incorporate discovered documents and other materials into their advocacy. Considering the gravity of the rights at stake and the severity of possible sanctions in child protection and juvenile delinquency cases, these changes are critically needed and should be welcomed by all those involved.

ENDNOTES

1. Id. This identity protection is required by MCL 722.625.
2. MCR 3.922(A)(1). Discovery demands are either new or revised as reflected in this order. See generally MCR 3.922 in effect before January 1, 2020.
3. MCR 3.922(A)(1)(i). As with other citations to the rule, please compare the old and new versions.
4. Id. Id. This identity protection is required by MCL 722.625.
5. MCR 3.922(A)(1)(i). Id. Id. This identity protection is required by MCL 722.625.
6. MCR 3.922(A)(1)(i). Id. Id. This identity protection is required by MCL 722.625.
7. MCR 3.922(A)(1)(i). Id. Id. This identity protection is required by MCL 722.625.
12. MCR 3.922(1)(1)(a) and (d). Id. MCR 3.922 in effect before January 1, 2020.
13. MCR 3.922(1)(1)(a) and (d). Id. MCR 3.922 in effect before January 1, 2020.
14. MCR 3.922(1)(1)(a) and (d). Id. MCR 3.922 in effect before January 1, 2020.
15. MCR 3.922(1)(1)(a) and (d). Id. MCR 3.922 in effect before January 1, 2020.
16. MCR 3.922(1)(1)(a) and (d). Id. MCR 3.922 in effect before January 1, 2020.
17. MCR 3.922(1)(1)(a) and (d). Id. MCR 3.922 in effect before January 1, 2020.
18. MCR 3.922(1)(1)(a) and (d). Id. MCR 3.922 in effect before January 1, 2020.
19. Id. Id. MCR 3.922 in effect before January 1, 2020.
20. Id. Id. MCR 3.922 in effect before January 1, 2020.