2001

Androgenius

David Boyle

University of Michigan Law School

Follow this and additional works at: http://repository.law.umich.edu/mjgl

Part of the Poetry Commons

Recommended Citation

Available at: http://repository.law.umich.edu/mjgl/vol8/iss1/4

This Poem is brought to you for free and open access by the Journals at University of Michigan Law School Scholarship Repository. It has been accepted for inclusion in Michigan Journal of Gender and Law by an authorized editor of University of Michigan Law School Scholarship Repository. For more information, please contact mlaw.repository@umich.edu.
S/he figured out—sometimes agonizingly—how to escape the confines of gender, that person did, flitting meaningfully if sometimes quick among the various fe/male/whatever personas that Gender engenders:

but not everyone likes a Houdini, an alltoo clever escape artist slipping out of definitional chains we “men” and “women” were all born with.
“Too hard to define”, dull terrified popeyed citizens called h/er/im. Sometimes folks like something they can get a HANDLE on; no funny stuff. People like to pin you down, like a dartboard.

So some kids found h/im/er “pinned down” one day in a lonely townpart, ripped up and missing quarts of warm human blood. S/he lived, but was not the same. However, the androgynous survivor was able to teach others, successors and friends, ways to survive, grow, cope, create, and the spirit thread of androgenius (or gynogenius) carried itself on through the young, the fire of brilliance bought once again, as always again, at the Promethean price of pain.

David Boyle*