Is That Library Addition Ever Going to be Done?

Just a few short notes to bring you up to date on the new library addition:

1) Yes Virginia, the contractor's projected date of completion is next March. After that, the desks, carpeting, furniture and other interior fixtures will be added. (Believe it or not.)

2) The "Grand Stairway" from the reading room to the subterranean levels was poured a while ago. This will be one of the most visible but hopefully least used aspects of the new library.

3) The roof is almost completely poured. A few holes were left for moving heavy machinery into the library.

4) Last month the insurance company for the project gave supervising Ron Clore an award for his outstanding safety record. This is only the second time in 30 years that such an award has been presented before a project was completed.

5) That friendly guy on the corner is Norbert. By all means stop and chat with him—but don't let him sell you a parking space on the roof of the new addition.

6) Hopefully, now that the monsoons are over, the mud in the Quad will dry up. Don't blame the Construction people for the whole mess though. The Quad has always had poor drainage. In an effort to help, the Construction people built a bridge/walkway across a particularly bad spot a while ago—which someone stole within 5 hours.

7) The project almost lost a crane to the mud too. They had to bring in a wrecker to tow it out. The suggestion has been made that we pave the Quad with green concrete until this whole thing is done.

8) In response to one reader's question, that cute engineer in the white hardhat is Jack (Hurricane) Witham. You can all meet Jack and his friends at Dominick's after 4:30 on nice days. Stop over for a study break and a beer.

ELS Projects

Tuesday, April 22, 1980. The ten year anniversary of Earth Day, the environmental movement has come a long way from "eco-freaks" and car-burriers. Today, it's an established institution, and a whole lot of energy is going to defending the gains of the '70s. Ann Arbor will mark the data with an all-day Earth Day Fair on Main St. Speakers, entertainment and information tables will fill the Quad. There will have a table to encourage letter-writing on the Hydrocarbons Bill (see below). Volunteers are still needed to help staff the table. If you can put in a couple of hours, please sign up on the E.L.S. bulletin board.

Other goings-on slated for Tuesday graphically illustrate the current defensive position of environmentalists. Michigan's legislative and judicial branches are both scheduled to consider frontal attacks on the Environmental Protection Act (MEPA). MEPA was drafted by Professor Joseph Sax in 1970 to create a public trust in natural resources and give standing to sue to citizens. In the legislature, the Senate Commerce Committee will consider S.B. 1119, which would exempt all normal oil and gas operations from all the laws protecting the state's water, air and land. According to the press, the bill is "well-greased" for passage by its seven cosponsors and the oil lobby. The bill is cleverly drafted. (by Shell Oil, according to one report.) The most damaging aspects are hidden in the definition of "significant" impacts on the environment are defined to exclude the normal effects of oil and gas drilling. After defining "environmentally valuable" lands as those in need of special protection, the bill requires the State to plan hydrocarbons development for those areas!

E.L.S. learned of the proposal last week, and several members rushed to Lansing to warn their Senators of the implications. Concerned students are urged to obtain more information from E.L.S. and to write their State Senators as soon as possible.

In the judiciary, an appeal of a MEPA ruling against a local developer is scheduled for the same day. The lower court enjoined the developer from building on three out of ten acres because of their significance as wild life habitat.

E.L.S. submitted a well-reasoned Amicus Curiae brief for the appel-llee (Kimberley Neighborhood Association). Julian Izbiky, Sue Funk and Al Knauf helped research and write the brief, submitted over Professor Sax's signature.

Congratulations are in order to all the E.L.S. members who invested their time and efforts to make this year's projects a phenomenal success. Among their accomplishments were successful lobbying for the Michigan Wet lands Act, assisting Adrian residents in their suit against the factory that contaminated their homes, drafting solar access legislation for Michigan, preparing the Kimberley brief, researching the RARE II Wilderness proposals, and producing a lengthy memorandum marshalling legal and policy argument against highway M-75.

E.L.S. is having a picnic to celebrate a productive year Sunday, April 27 at Gallup Park (See Docket).

ANNOUNCING: E.L.S. SUMMER PROJECTS Going to be in Ann Arbor this summer? E.L.S. needs your help. Project topics include S.B. 119 (discussed above), billboard bans, toxics, and laying the groundwork for the fall. Meeting Thursday, April 24. (See Docket).

UJA Campaign Tops $10k

United Jewish Appeal Student Campaign is pleased to report the results of this year's campaign, which proved to be the most successful ever. Campus-wide, $10,600 was pledged, with Law students responsible for more than 25% of that amount. Over 100 law students participated—their generosity will be felt the world over.

Those planning to complete payment this term, please do so in the next week. If you plan to pay over the summer, please contact Hillel (663-3356) by May 1.

We would like to thank and to commen to those law students whose time contributions added to our success. We look forward to even greater participation next year—look for us in the fall when we organize.

TO THE EDITOR-

Dear Editor:

Late last month I sent a courier from my office to the I.C.L.E. office in Hutchine Hall to pick up some material. While there, she picked up the March 24, 1980, copy of the Rea Geriatric, which out of idle curiosity I decided to look through. In doing so, I read the letters to the editor. To say I was surprised is an understatement, but I will not say I was shocked as I do not shock easily, if at all.

My grandfather, may he rest in peace, always said "A filthy mouth bespeaks a filthy mind." Yet, in what purport to be law school publications, you had two letters which, at best, could be labeled as filthy, one from a male and another from a female (?). My reason for this letter is not to criticize your editorial policies or to start a free speech argument, for in the first instance I do not have nor have I ever had any connection with the U. of M. Law School, and in the second instance, I feel that everyone is entitled to make a fool or whatever of himself or herself by his or her pronouncements without interference.

Rather, my reason for writing is to adduce evidence. Yet, in what purport to be the future in need of an attorney employee or associate for my office, I certainly would not consider U. of M. graduates for the position.

While it may be cute or whatever to foulmouth in this day and age, there are those of us who feel that the practice of law should remain a dignified profession and the practice limited to gentlemen and ladies. The language appearing in the letters is certainly inconsistent with such standards and should be restricted to seçenek and to conversations with mules.

Harold I. Pawlowski Attorney at Law P.O. Drawer C 308 Huron Avenue Bad Axe, Michigan 48413

Dear Editor:

The Gargoyles Film Society is once again choosing the films to be shown for next fall. Once again only male law students are participating in the decision. (Some women who expressed interest in joining the Society were not aware of its first meeting.) And once again most members are in favor of showing a pornographic film at the law school.

The National Lawyers Guild strongly urges the Film Society to reassess its priorities and consider the feelings of male students and female on the subject. We realize that porn films make money to finance other movies. However, this benefit must be weighed against the detrimental effects which we know from past experience occur.

Women law students are offended; the student body becomes polarized on the issue, and the law school gains a local, if not a national reputation for showing porn films. The Ann Arbor News article on pornography on campus, which quoted one student as saying, "It must be all right -- the law school shows porn films was published by our newspapers.

From our observations of customers last fall, most of the viewers of Misty Beethoven were undergraduate males with cartoons of beards in hand. If the Gargoyle Film Society's purpose is to serve the student body community, it will give weight to that portion of the student body that does not want porn films. Please put aside any First Amendment posturing and ask yourselves if it is really so important to show porn films which show violence against a vulnerable group -- women. We suggest it is not, and we hope that the film society reached the same conclusion.

Morill Fillmore's Ghost

by Marc Abrams

It seems hard to believe, but today's LSSS members could be tomorrow's major political figure. While the outgoing Senate certainly lacked class (if you consider class as being the ability to kick off a table with footgear from the Rosa Klebb shoe factory), and the new Senate hasn't had time to establish themselves in the continuing spirit of imanity, it should be said in their defense that they are just acting out what they see their adult role models doing.

Ronnie the Raygun is holding reality parties while his speeches are big up some more juicy misstatements. Yesterday, in a bid for the lunatic fringe vote, he claimed that Andrew Jackson 'sowed the seeds of Vietnam.' We are not amused.

George Bush is trying to quietly settle out of court for his copyright infringement, but sources say that 'Big Mac' is looking for a large bundle from the court.

John Anderson has gone into retreat. There, he will be cloned twice, so he may run as a Republican, an Independent, or a third-party candidate all at once.

Jimmy Carter continues to negotiate for the release of the delegates still being held captive in Pennsylvania. The delegates, now in their third week of being held media prisoners, had to comment. However, a high White House source said that the delegates would be in New York City in time for the convention, or at the very least, the Teheran primaries.

Teddy Kennedy today called the LSSS the finest legislative body in history.

What with the economy the way it is, the likelihood of the Chrysler Corporation (excuse me, Lee, the new Chrysler Corporation) escaping total collapse seems slim. They are laying off white collar workers at a furious pace. And don't worry. Lawyers can't be laid off. The worse the situation gets, the more they need us. In fact, they can lay everyone off, go out of business, and still need us. We'll be the only people left getting paid. Or, better still, if we don't get paid, the firms handling the proceedings can grab the contents of any assets satisfying the debt. "Today, Cravath, Swine & Moore announced that they would only stay in the trucking business as long as it took to sell the $40 million debt owed them by Chrysler, or until the associates running the Vpsiliant plant got bored. Said a spokesman for the firm, 'It was about time to diversify anyway.'" You all have fun this summer too, diversifying where you will. But do it better than Chrysler, okay?

A2 Pizza: A Retrospective

As Springtime finally comes to the Law School, final exams follow closely. Every law student knows that finals bring the late-night munchies as surely as civil procedure brings sleep. So, for those of you who will in the next few weeks suffer "pizza pangs" it is the purpose of the writer of this article to deliver to you the following:

1. Bell's Greek Pizza--* for taste, * for delivery. Bell's is ambrosia, the crust actually rises, indicating the dough has not been mishandled or rolled repeatedly. It has a crisp bottom showing that the pizza pans are greased, unusual in itself. Bell's sauce is the tastiest with a good amount of oregano and peppers. The cheese is in good shape and they use fresh mushrooms and other veggies. Bell's also has the best pizza for eating cold the next morning because delivery is generally quite good and it is close enough to pick up yourself. Open to 1 AM Mon-Thurs, til 2 on Fri and Sat.

The Law School welcomes its Student Services Staff Ms. Samuel Bertram Financial Aid Officer. Ms. Bertram will be assuming the majority of Dean Eklund's financial aid responsibilities. She brings with her 4 years of financial aid experience in the Office of Financial Aid at Michigan, and she will soon receive her Master's degree in Counseling Higher Education from U-M. Mrs. Martha Fisher will continue her responsibilities as Student Service Assistant in the Financial Aid Office although she has moved to Room 303. Please see Mrs. Fisher with your financial aid questions and to pick up and turn in forms. Walk-in hours with Ms. Bertram will be posted outside room 308 soon.

Thanks to your pledges and contributions which continue to your fixed SPF has now raised over $5400. The SPF Board is still involved in trying to decide which of the applicants should receive support and how much. Please pledge by April 25 so we can make our final decisions before exams start. Recipients will be announced April 28.

This illustration card is filled out properly for my own new address this summer and fall. Please fill out the card completely to help the summer mail forwarder. And those of you who are back in the fall, don't forget to give the Lawyers Club your new fall addresses when you get back.

Many thanks to the people who helped me with Night Manager and mail sorting this year. Good luck to all on finals.

I leave, for this year, with the words of Sir Francis Bacon: "Silence is the virtue of fools."

P.S. The thumbprint is so that you can know for sure this is my column and not a fake.
For those of you not invited to yesterday’s Honnor Convocation, our associate and I would like to present a list of awards we wish had been given. Congratulations to the lucky winners!

The Mother Teresa Award goes to the members of the School for devoting their lives to associating only with lepers.

The Beverley Poole Contract Scholarship is presented to our former LSE5 Secretary for reminding us that when you promise a GIRL $50 per day, you should come through.

The Ronald Reagan Unknown Comic Award belongs to the Editors of the April 1 Bulletin for their in recognition of the insignificance achievement in reminding us that the “pig” factor in the law school’s affirmative action program operates to achieve its goal regardless of their religion, creed or mentality.

An autographed copy of The Total Woman goes to Mark Horby for his efforts to add new meaning to the word “feminist.”

The Tammy Stewart Prize goes to Tammy Stewart for her efforts to add new meaning to the word “researcher.”

The Fritz Perls Sensitivity Prize goes to Prof. Perls for likening a woman’s right to an abortion to her right to a printing press. Good luck enriching Women and the Law next fall.

The Al Knau Award for Incisive Political Analysis goes to Dean Sandalow in recognition of his assertion “There is really no sexism at this school?”

New this year is a prize commemorating Dean Sandalow’s famous class on the idea of Equality (Oddly enough, faculty, faculty type-selectors, and selected Journal-types) which is given to Prof. Whitman for her observation that “even the better women law students agree that Women and the Law should be offered.” [emphasis added]

The Peter Westen Award for Social Consciousness goes to Joel Rusman for his valiant efforts as head of Gargoyle Films.

The Jimmy Carter Award for Political Blindness goes to Jimmy Carter, mostly for his inadvertent observation that “they even had people doing the jobs women used to do.”

The Future Rotary Club Speakers of America Prize goes to Mark Horby (a big winner this year) for his command of verbs as demonstrated at the Law Review banquet last fall.

The final award is the coveted Hutchins Hall Institutional Autonomy Award which goes to all those with a firm commitment to diversity in admissions so that all types of students can come here to learn to be the same.

And that’s it for the Musings, but do not be dismayed. The tradition of obnoxious journalism will be carried on next year.

From among the two entries to the Writing Competition, I have selected two winners.

And that’s it for the Musings, but do not be dismayed—...the tradition of obnoxious journalism will be carried on next year.

From among the two entries to the Writing Competition, I have selected two winners.

But I will allow you to write a column in next year’s E.D. on winning entry is entitled “I’m the Tech for 2-3 students sitting at the podium, reading an abbreviated version of the text (or the Hornbook) to 75 somnambulist students. Lest I forget, each student makes her way through each problem in every chapter, gaining definitive "maybes" and sometimes yes, sometimes no answers. In addition, sections of the UCC are blurred out in the same fashion as one chants three Hail Marys and goes to sin no more. Actually, the class is very useful. My first grade teacher has heard from me after a 16 year lapse. I’m not sure she remembers me, but I’d already written to everyone else in my address book, including two deceased uncles.

Occasionally, when a particular point is especially obscure, Wild Bill joins in and hopefully confuses the issue. If anyone knew, J.J.,’s former students could do a booming business in Black Market notes. What am I bid for an Article 9 outline...do I hear $10...? Discussions with the school’s Fairy Godmother, Sue E., have produced little relief (despite offers to personally finish the new addition to the law library in six weeks or less). One change has occurred in the course of the semester prior to each class the student teachers must now consult with Old Man in his office and run through their act for an audience of one...all the while breathing in his cigarettes smoke. It guess that’s the U of M’s version of a live ammunition exercise—if the Tech can remain coherent for 30 minutes or more they’re ready to teach the class.

Due to an attendance policy which only allows five absences (despite statistical proof that continued attendance can result in permanent brain damage—e.g. narcolepsy) the class is considerably ended (or should I say attended by numerous students?). However, a few students have managed to hedge this significantly. Seven have come down with infectious meningitis which lasts from 12:30 to 1:30 p.m. One comes regularly at 1:10. And a certain individual has mastered Indian philosophy in order to create an astral projection of himself in class everyday.

There is hope, however. Like T.V., a limited exposure may cause no significant damage. The maximum possible dose being 45 hours, it is unlikely to cause any significant genetic damage. However, there is a likelihood of developing a permanent case of UCC Ignorantis. At present, there is no way to remove the self-destructive tendencies of this minority group.

Sign me.

Present in body and unconscious of mind.

Considered essential to the fall orientation week is a speech by a renowned legal figure which instills into us the obligation of our being and mission. Here is only one way to experience law school. The class of ’82 was not exempted Wade Mccree, Jr., the Solicitor General of the United States, the “advocate’s advocate,” as Dean Sandalow described him, detailed how each of us was to spend the next three years of our collective life. If we wanted to have any semblance of success after graduation, we had to:

--be editor of the law review
--work for law firms during all of our summers
--speak or anything even mildly disturbing from the business of law school. wine, sex, and song being only the most obvious
--round out our backgrounds by taking and passing at least five of the cultural opportunities available to students: concerts, plays, exhibits, etc.

Those of you who were not majoring in “essentials” were not stingy enough by themselves. The addition of the incongruous fourth certainly left the audience confused beyond return. The monastic program which was apparently ahead of us, if we were even to get an offer in Pecora, was far from attractive—but if Wade Mccree, Jr. said it, we knew it had to be true. If we did all of these things we told us, we, too, could someday argue before the Supreme Court. We hurriedly cancelled our subscriptions to Playboy, dumped out our Old Millwaukeees, and settled down to the celibate lifestyle advocated by our mentor.

But wait! What is this? Our hero is being assimilated within the national press as a man who cannot meet his own standards of excellence, who might have a hard time making it to the semis—finals of the Johnnie Walker Snowboarding competition. The March issue of The American Lawyer, a seasoned Court Watcher concludes that on this basis of his overall performance since appointment, Mccree is the government’s top-ranking advocate, but that “it is becoming clear, however, that ‘Bill’ is a pro at the top. Mccree is steadily developing a reputation as an advocate who can’t keep his case together even for a half hour. Federal lawyers complain privately that he’s too fast and too brief or can’t stay briefed long enough to get through.” The article goes on to detail how he “Failed quite spectacularly” in his most recent appearance, how he was “deeply mired in contradiction,” “stumbled repeatedly over questions” and left considerable evidence of his wake.

Remember how you felt when you heard that there was no Santa Claus? That Prosser was mortal? The Duke was lost in Iran? One’s first year in law school is a shattering experience without the additional trauma of learning that the man we once thought was our first definition of the meaning and purpose of law school was merely giving us the old adage, “not everything is as it seems.”

I must admit, though, that as the days have passed since this revelation, my attitude has gone from one of shock and horror to that of moderate smugness. I reason that if someone can become Solicitor General of the United States on something like a collection of jokes and a good job offer in Malibu with something less than a golden resume. The Becoming a hero is being dusted off, and the Navajo Collection is being chilled. The party’s not over, it’s just beginning.

LEGAL PATHOLOGY:
Given all the pain and suffering associated with law school, it comes as no surprise that a few law students must be listed as casualties. For the fortunate, the effects will not be permanent. The profoundly traumatized persevere solely on their belief in life after law school. The following is a pathology of common law school disorders, intended to aid self-diagnosis. If you suspect that you are suffering from one or more of these diseases, do not be alarmed. You are not alone.

Law School Blues: Sufferers of this disease are given to erratic, spontaneous late night phone calls to old girlfriends/boyfriends and recurring dreams about their mothers. They are overwhelmed by a desire to be somewhere (anywhere) else. They are able to sleep only while in the reading room with their head resting on an open Civil Procedure book. They are plagued by premonitions of imminent doom. Incidence of this disease reaches epidemic proportions every May and December. While there are no known cures for this disease, commonly suggested palliatives include Frank Capra movies, cheesecake, sex, and dropping out.

Hutchins Delirium: This illness afflicts the sufferer with sensations of complete disorientation. Particularly susceptible are Tax II students and everyone in Professor Smith's Property Class. Symptoms include high absentee rate, headaches, paranoia, over-expenditures on canned outlines, and frequent, embarrassing passing in class. The only known cure for this disease is graduation.

Gunner Rabies: This repugnant affliction renders the victim unable to keep his hand below his waistline at all too frequent intervals. First-semester, first-year grades cure sufferers of this disease are those around the class. The only known cure for this disease is merely a form of protective damage that shock the conscience and sear the retina. Some clinicians contend that this disease is merely a form of protective coloration, and, indeed, the victims do tend to achieve a reduction of noteworthy characteristics. Other assert it is amenable disease contracted at the moment victims acquire their first alligator. The only known cure are extreme: imprisonment; enlistment; and loss of L.L. Bean catalogue privileges.

1. Omega- 1/2 for taste,  for delivery. Omega is your typical round, delivered pizza. They use ground sausage (looks like hamburger) and are fairly generous. Omega has one trait which endeared it to me, it was open until 3 AM every day when the munchies hit after 12:45 AM. Omega's is still a possibility and a reasonably good tasting one at that.

2. Cottage Inn- 1/2 for taste,  for delivery. Cottage Inn delivery comes from a different oven than does the pizza served in the restaurant. Hence, it will not taste exactly the same. Its best quality is its cheese, always lavish. Crust is generally good, but has varied. If you love Cottage Inn pizza, forget reading this column, it's one of a kind.

3. Pizza Express (Domino's)- 1/2 for taste,  for delivery. Pizza X is the norm in taste-not an insult, but it is your typical, average pizza. Crust varies from quite good to cardboard and the cheese ration swings from good to almost nonexistent-a problem common when you're turning out large numbers of pizzas in a short time. They are the experts on delivery, though.

4. Little Caesar's-  for taste, 1/2 for delivery. Cardboard crust, no cheese, and they don't even deliver to the dorm room. Worse yet, the delivery person is rude.

5. DJ's- 1/2 for taste, * for delivery. A good choice of pace, they turn out a decent product, after Little Caesar's, I was amazed.

Mr. Tony's and Hughes 1 were not tested, my waistline started to object to all these late-night pig-outs in the line of duty. I've heard good things about Mr. Tony's delivery and price-it is close enough to pick up and have heard nothing about Hughes 1 as the undergraduate preferred kind, delivery hours, at least, will be cut so call early the first time to check.

\textbf{Beware the Ides of May!} Yes, that dreaded time of finals is nearing as the weather gets better and the work gets worse. The year's end is usually not met with the greatest of joy. If it is the calendar year we point to the misery of the freezing weather; if it is the tax year...anyway, and if it is the school year there is the problem of finals. Happy endings don't seem to be in the scheme of things unless, of course, we decide to change that scheme. Try a smile.

How many law students have you seen smile lately? Or even look happy? Not that life here is a joy and a wondrous experience all of the time, but certainly what with the advent of sunshine, warm weather, and all that we might be able to rejoice a small bit! After all, we might be in Cambodia.

Adding a sense of humor might be asking too much of a law student, but you need a sense of the absurd to appreciate the law, and once you cultivate that sense you begin to even enjoy some of its more intricate and useless convolutions. So for your own good, and for the scenery, try a smile!
