OUR MAN IN HUTCHINS: Dean Allan Smith will represent the University of Michigan at a luncheon next Wednesday in Washington, D.C., given in honor of Judge Wilbur K. Miller, an alumnus of the University, who has been named Chief Judge of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

Professor Kauper spoke last weekend at Valparaiso University Law School.

MEET ENRIQUE M. REYES: Studying for his Masters in Constitutional Law is Enrique M. Reyes, a graduate of the Manuel L. Quezon University in Manila. He is with the Solicitor General's Office there and plans to represent the Philippine government in official litigation.

With the planting of the Spanish flag by Ferdinand Magellan on March 16, 1521, grew the law which prevailed for over 350 years. Today the Philippine law of contracts, succession, property, crimes and commerce is based on the Spanish civil law.

In the chaotic year of 1898-99, a provisional government announced its independence from Spain, only to declare war, six months later, on the U.S. But relations between the Philippines and the U.S. quickly improved, culminating in the Tydings-McDuffie Act of March 24, 1934, which provided for a constitution and eventual independence in 1946. This is the same constitution which is effective today, stipulating a Bill of Rights and tri-partite form of government. All of the Philippine common law was derived from the U.S., including procedure and evidence; there is no trial by jury.

Twenty-eight miles from the city of Manila lies the ruins of a natural fortress carved out of volcanic rock called Corregidor; its maze of underground tunnels and galleries was used for hundreds of years for the defense of the islands. Today it is a memorial to those who defended Bataan from January to April of 1942 and to the thousands who died in the subsequent "death march." Throughout the war, President Quezon maintained a government in exile in the U.S. Afterward, it was returned to the capital, Manila, and full independence was granted July 4, 1946.

Today the Philippines is the only republican form of government in Asia. It boasts the highest literacy rate in Asia (59%). Beginning with 1,000 U.S. teachers who came to the islands in 1901, it has developed the most extensive educational system in the Orient, devoting 29% of its budget for schooling. Over 80% of the 27 million population are Catholics and many of the schools and universities are parochial. Although not without its problems, many times the Philippine government is cited as the world's model democracy.
INSURANCE AS A KEY INSTRUMENT: In a historical approach to the overall power structure of a society, Prof. Spencer L. Kimball has completed a new book entitled, "Insurance and Public Policy." Wisconsin was chosen as a locus for the "case study" of the intricate relationships which developed, over the past 100 years, in one state between a rapidly expanding commercial enterprise and a changing public policy. The force of public policy over the insurance enterprise is revealed in the effect that insurance has as a major mobilizer of capital and its influence in creating a more tightly structured society which assumes responsibility for the welfare of its members. It is concluded, that, in the light of the law of negligence re automobile accidents, workmen's compensation, etc., fault becomes less and less relevant in an age of insurance. It is stated, "Insurance was the mechanism by which social costs were forced into the private cost accounting of entrepreneurs. Insurance was thus a key instrument in changing the laissez-faire society into a society which, as an organized whole, assumed many of the risks that the unregulated market economy case on individuals."
